THE MEAN FLIES.

"I was so mean this morning," said the fly. "Yes, I was just as mean as I could be."

"And so was I," said the second fly.

"Tell me about it," said the visitor fly. "I love to hear of mean acts. They make me buzz with happiness. Indeed, I enjoy hearing of mean acts second only to doing them myself."

"I like to go on sweets and eat other creatures' food—just nibble at it, you know. I don't care whether I am hushed away or not. I come right back again."

"The other day some people were having lunch and some of my brothers and sisters were fearfully annoying. We knew it. We knew we weren't wanted. But that didn't matter to us. We stayed about and bothered the people dreadfully."

"They brushed us off and said:

"Oh, dear, those horrible flies, why can't we get rid of them?"

"We'd go back again and bother them. We were just as mean as mean could be."

"I can see," said the first fly, "that you will enjoy our story."

"Yes," said the second fly. "I can see that, too. You will appreciate it."

"Do tell it to me," said the visitor fly.

"Well," said the first fly, "this morning there was a little fly asleep."

"Yes, yes," buzzed the visitor fly, "this sounds mean and nice."

"It is," said the second fly.

"Pray continue," said the visitor fly.

"Well," said the first fly, "this little girl had been to a fancy dress party the night before. She had had a beautiful time. I was on the ceiling when I heard her telling her mother about it."

"It was very late when she got home and she had had such a very exciting time that she was all tired out."

"She told her mother all about the costumes and what every one did and how they danced and how everyone loved everyone else."

"Well, just as her mother was saying 'good night' to her and was kissing her and wishing her pleasant dreams and all that foolishness, I heard her say:

"Now, dearie, you can sleep late, for tomorrow is Saturday. Don't wake up for breakfast. You can have some fruit and milk any time you get up or you needn't get up until lunch time if you don't want to. You can have a great, long rest."

"Oh, I'm so glad," said the little girl to herself, "for I just feel as though I could sleep and sleep."

"That was enough for me," said the first fly.

"And for me," said the second fly.

"This sounds wonderful," said the visitor fly. "Do go on."

"Well, she was just so tired and sleepy that it was fun to be so mean," said the first fly. "If she hadn't been so tired and sleepy it wouldn't have been half such fun."

"You can understand," said the second fly.

"Easily," said the visitor fly.

"And," said the first fly, "early this morning I began my work, just when she was sleeping so hard because she was so tired. I got on her face and then I stuck my stinger until she had to wake up and brush me off."

"Then," said the second fly, "I did the same and got on the other side of her face."

"She tried to lie on one side and then on the other," said the first fly. "Then she tried to cover up her head, and of course she was most uncomfortable doing that, for she couldn't breathe that way," said the second fly.

"So between us we wouldn't let her sleep, and she was so tired, oh, so terribly tired, and so, terribly sleepy that it was great fun."

"Wonderful, wonderful," said the visitor fly.

"And when she went downstairs so early, for she couldn't sleep, and her mother asked why, she said:

"The flies simply wouldn't let me sleep."

"Wasn't that great?" said the first fly.

"Yes, wasn't it?" added the second fly.

"Great!" buzzed the visitor fly.

Why He Envyed George.

Bobby—I wish I had been George Washington.

Mother—Why so, dear?

Bobby—Well, ma, he couldn't tell a lie, and so when he was visiting and was asked if he would like another piece of pie, instead of saying no for politeness sake he told the truth and said yes.

Must Carry His Trunk.

Why does an elephant never go visiting? Because he has to carry his trunk.

Protect the Song Birds.

Song birds may be protected from cats by winding four or five strands of barbed wire around the tree trunks. Cats have a great dislike for barbed wire and will not cross it. The wire will not harm the trees and can be removed when the birds leave.

Comes Early in Spring.

Among the first birds to arrive in spring in the northern part of the United States is the bluebird, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington.

Home Life

By REV. OTIS G. DALE, D.D.

Superintendent of Men, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him—Eph. 6:4.

The history of all civilization proves that the home is the largest determining factor in individual character and social life.

The character of the individual, and therefore his place in the social system, is determined by the teaching and influences that are thrown about him in the home.

The family has upon it the stamp of divine origin and blessing. It is so sacred in its nature that its various relations are used as the symbols of man's relation to God. God has chosen to call himself our "Father" and he speaks of his people as his "children."

The family has in it the germ of every social and political problem. There are a few laws, principles which if thoroughly inculcated in the home would solve all our complicated social problems. These are (1) respect for rightful authority, (2) proper regard for the rights of others, (3) duties of helpfulness to the weak and unfortunate, (4) industry coupled with economy, (5) fear of God.

In the first place, home is the place to teach respect for authority and the principles of obedience. Parents stand for ultimate authority over their children, and while this authority should never be exercised in an arbitrary manner, it is vitally necessary to the character of the child, to the integrity of the home, to the security of the social system, that a child from his earliest days should be taught to recognize the authority vested in his parents, and to obey without question.

In the second place, the family relationships furnish opportunity for teaching the first lessons regarding the rights of others. If family life is properly ordered, parents will recognize the rights that exist between them and their children, and children will be taught to respect the rights of their parents and of their brothers and sisters. Selfishness and self-seeking will not be permitted; domineering habits of thought and action, over-reaching and over-riding the rights and privileges of others in the same little community, will not be permitted, and being required to observe these proper relationships within the home will make it reasonably certain that they will not disregard proper relationships out in the world.

In the third place, the presence of younger ones or of the weak, sick or unfortunate ones in the home could be used for developing a sense of duty toward all such as they are found in society generally.

Again, common home tasks and the living plans of every household furnish opportunity to teach lessons of industry and economy to the young which may be of very great value to them all their lives. Today our whole system is cursed with incompetency, unreliability, laziness, extravagance, wastefulness, habits of life which have come from the failure of the home to inculcate the right principles of industry and economy.

But the last named of the general principles is of the greatest importance of all, the teaching of the fear of God. I speak of it as the "fear of God" because that is the root idea of all morality and religion. There is no substantial foundation for moral training outside of religion. Precepts never secure performance. If we cannot offer something by way of motive, stronger and better than to say, "do right because it is right," we shall accomplish nothing in the way of moral education. If the child is taught to honor the law of God as represented in the authority of parents and in his written Word, as a man he will not complicate any social problem.

Every consideration of individual and social welfare points to the necessity of teaching children religion; not the mere facts about religion, but the teaching of religious experience and that from earliest childhood at home. It is God's way, who said concerning his ancient law, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and thou shalt talk with them when thou sittest in thy house."

Saving the home must be a matter of religion, the religion of Jesus Christ lived and taught as set forth in the Christian Scriptures. In the everyday life of parents, and made a part of that life of the home, so that it becomes also the experience of the children. This alone can save in any considering measure the life of the coming generation for God and native land.
